The Famous Insurance Murderer Writes a Book,

HE MADE HOMICIDE A STUDY

And Reduced Crime to a Science-No Les than a Score of Persons Killed by Him. of Killing Persons Startling Story of a Remarkable Man-

PHILADELPHIA, April 5.-H. H. Holmes, the greatest murderer of mod-ern times, has made a confession. In it he tells how and why he put to death no less than twenty men, women and children. He gives all the facts. He morselessly as he mirdered. He neglects no detail. He even gives an account of six murders which he planned, but was prevented from carrying out. It was well known that he put eleveh persons out of the world, so when his confession is printed, there will be accounts of the violent death of nine people whose absence from their humes and their friends has hitherto been unexplained.

He describes in detail the murder of morselessly as he murdered. He neg-explained.

He describes in detail the murder of the Williams sisters, of Quinlan, the janitor of the castle, who "knew too much;" of Pietzel, the murder for which he is to hang, and of the Pietzel children.

In fact, Holmes, sitting in the shadow of the gallows, with the last hope gone, with the time and place of his death fixed beyond change, has given way to his vanity as a craftsman, and has written his life.

He, of course, cannot tell the truth, his vanity as a craftsman, and has written his life.

He, of course, cannot tell the truth, but he has told it as nearly as possible for a man of his stripe to tell. He will add something to the knowledge of his life, but he will add nothing to the knowledge of his character.

His little book will have a shelf all to its self in the library of criminology. He announces himself as a professional murderer. Each of his flurders was deliberately, carefully planned, executed with calmess and precision. He has written about them as a great scientist would write of a series of valuable experiments. He was a professional murderer. He has studied murderer. He pursued it to earn a living, but also for its own sake. He used the whole of his very considerable brain power in planning and carrying forward very subtle murder plots, in devising new means of killing human beings.

He "points with pride" to his work.

devising new measure beings.

He "points with pride" to his work.

He thinks he has fairly earned immortality, and he could not die without letting the world know what a great man it has produced.

He deliberately chose a career of crime when he was a farm boy up in Vermont.

SIndled for Murder.

Vermont.

Sindled for Murder.

He attended medical college to equip himself or the taking of life, just as other men go to college to equip themself were not not college to equip themself were the saving of life. He was not insane in the ordinary sense of the word. He was simply a monstrous pervert, a criminal degenerate, with a moral sense exactly inverted.

He tried every sort of murder—poisoning, suffocation by gases, strangulation with the bare fingers, beating to death with a club—every sort except crude, noisy murders. He never murderd by acceldent or an impulse. He liked to have plenty of time to think it all out, to select the place and the moment. He took a very great pleasure in his work. He was too much of an artist not to realize that haste always prolongs it.

It as impossible to explain such a monster mind as his on any theory of heredity as it is to explain senius by studying genealogical tables. He was born and bred on a farm, in surroundings that would compare favorably with those that have produced the soberest, most virtuous—citizens we have.

There is a faint trace of insanity in There is a faint trace of insanity in have.

There is a faint trace of insanity in his family, but, as he himself says, it is too slight to use as a basis for alleging that he is insane. He was a good-natured, jovial youth, fond of his fellow-beings, especially fond of women. And that was his general character to the end.

beings, especially fond of women. And that was his general character to the end.

He was always well liked by those he met. He was always generous with his money. He made love to every woman who came in his way and was so sympathetic an ardent that they often returned his love. Next to murder, his greatest successes were in love making. He leaves several wives in different parts of the country. He was polite, courteous, gentle, even to the very last. The last view his viotims had of him was as reassuring and agreeable as any. He murdered with a smile on his face, and, if it was a woman or a child who was engaging his attention, with a term of endearment upon his lips.

To a man whose passion was the killing of his fellow-creatures, by plot and stealth, the natural occupation was that of insurance swindler. The profits of that business are large. The opportunities for clever plotting are unrivalled. And if that industry is joined with the industry of murder, the combination is most attractive.

His Apprenticeship is Crime.

His Apprenticeship in Crime. The swindler kills his accomplice, thereby saving the expense and the danger of a substitute corpse, avoiding a division of the profits and also hav-ing the pleasure of indulging a pen-ing the pleasure of indulging a pen-chant for murder.

These many enticemnts appealed powerfully to Holmes—whose real name, by the way, is Herman Webster Mudgett. He became an insurance swindler while he was still in the medi-cal school at the University of Michi-gan.

swinder while he was the work of Michigan.

It would be of no especial interest in a study of this sort, to rehearse the facts of his early career. He made a good deal of money and spent it freely, He committed several murders, but they were not out of the usual order. He was simply serving his apprenticeship. It was not until he established himself in Chicago that he became a real monster. He had been looking about for some time for a definite habitation where he could pursue his three occupations — swindling, murdering and love-making—at his case. He was a domestic man with quiet tastes and no great fondness for roving.

He felt that if he could build himself a suitable home he could pursue his passion in a more leisurely and agreeable fashion. So he did build himself a home—the famous "Castie" in Chicago. He selected a site near the World's Fair grounds. The World's Fair was about to open and he could find many with whom to amuse himself. He must have thought out the plans of the house carefully.

It was built in a way that the workmen would suspect nothing. After they had done, he and his accomplice, who was an expert mason, easily made the necessary changes. The finished house was an ideal place for doing murder with secrecy and dispatch, it had eccret chambers and smothering rooms, a resort for burning bodies, a quicklime plt, benches and blocks for chopping of corpses, and no sounds could possibly reach the street.

Here men, women and children were murdered for the money that they had with them, for the insurance on their lives, because they knew too much, because Holmes was weary of them, or for no other reason than that he was fond of murder. He killed his friends, he killed his accomplices. He killed his sweethearts. He killed children.

After over a year of quiet pleasure, he was compelled to give up the "Castle." He was pressed for money, and as money would not come to him, he had to go forth to seek it.

Then cams the great Pletzel conspiracy. He married a young and pretty woman and spent the intervals of honeymooning in killing Pletzel, in choking three Pleitzel children to death and burning their bodies, in plotting to kill mrs. Pletzel and her eldest daughter. He would kiss his wife and leave her for a few hours, strangle a child, cut it up, burn its body, hide the charred bones and return to his wife, and its down to sleep soundly and sweetly.

Bradstreet's: The demand for wool is dull and the market continues depressed, with values nominal. Woolen mills are being closed in many instances, particularly those employed on men's-wear goods, and manufacturers show no desire to buy the raw material as long as there is no prospect of their needing it. Dress woolen mills are showing more activity since the market opened for fall goods, but as yet it has not resulted in increasing the demand for wool. The wool market abroad is firm, with a strong position noted, but this only helps the tone here through sympathy. Fleece wools are dull, but held steady, with territory grades weak and in buyers' favor as far as prices are concerned. Some domestic wools have been sold for export, and it is hoped that a market abroad can be worked up for our surplus. Foreign wools are quiet, but firm.

Although the volume of business in stocks in the week has been comparatively light, partly owing to the practical double holiday, at the close the speculation has not lacked developments of the most sensational order. Bonds were relatively active for a half holiday, with the Northern Pacific issues the features. The general market ruled strong and higher, on sales of $1,365,000. The market during the week was strengthened by the favorable influences covering the share speculation and the dealings were on a fairly large scale. The total sales were $8,767,000.

Government bonds advanced slightly on transactions of $351,500.

State issues displayed an advancing tendency on dealings of $35,000. The total sales of stocks to-day were $8,546 shares.
